"Wasn't Halloween fun today?"
"It sure was, but now what shall we play?"

"Let's play ghosts! We'll each go home and get a sheet.
We'll come back here and meet on this street."

"OK," said Jackie. "I'll see you in awhile.
I'm so excited — I can't help but smile."

But little did the children know, they were completely unaware — two little ghosts were standing by and listening right there.

The two little ghosts had a naughty plan.
They giggled and whispered and away they ran.

Danny came back with his bed sheet on.
"Hi!" said the first ghost, "let's stay out till dawn."

The two of them ran off quick as a wink.
Is Danny with a real ghost? What do you think?

Along came Jackie in her ghostly sheet.
"Hi," said the second ghost. "I knew we'd meet."

Jackie and the naughty ghost hid behind a tree. Jackie rubbed her eyes in surprise, for what did she see?

"Wait a minute," said Danny. "What does this mean?
This is the craziest thing I've ever seen!"

"If you're Jackie and I'm Danny, then who can they be?"
"We're real ghosts from ghostland — now do you see?"

"Gee, that's really great. Do you want to play?"
"Yes we do, but we can only stay here today."

Then the little ghosts took them by the hand, and off they flew to Halloween land.

The ghosts showed them the sights as they walked.
They floated alongside their friends as they talked.

"This great big house is where Dracula stays.
He's out most nights and sleeps away the days."

"This is the castle that Frankenstein owns.
He's so scary, he rattles skeleton bones."

All of a sudden they were in a large room.
A witch was dancing with her big broom.

A skeleton was dancing a lively step. They were spooky people with a lot of pep!

The two little ghosts said, "We'll take you home now.
Hold our hands, jump up, and we'll show you how."

Before very long, they were both on their block.

"Wait a minute! The ghosts! Where did they disappear?"

"They're not over there and not over here!"

Then they heard giggles and laughter.
"We hope you live happily ever after!"

HAPPY HALLOWEEN
